What's New In?

The DBLint utility is a useful tool that can find bad design patterns in database designs. It can help find issues in database schema and design as well as suggestions for better database designs. DBLint is a database design pattern checker. DBLint processes database design files and reports any problem found in them. Each problem is given a score, based on the severity of the problem and the importance of the table affected by it. DBLint identifies a number of consistent design errors: · Inconsistent naming conventions (overall name) · Inconsistent naming conventions (table name) · Inconsistent naming conventions (column name) · Inconsistent naming conventions (index name) · Duplicated columns (overall name, table name and table structure) · Inconsistent keys (overall name, table name and table structure) · Inconsistent keys (table name and table structure) · Inconsistent foreign keys (overall name, table name and table structure) · Inconsistent foreign keys (table name and table structure) · Inconsistent columns (overall name, table name and table structure) · Inconsistent table structure (overall name, table name, column name and index name) · Inconsistent key and column name (overall name) · Inconsistent join criteria (overall name) · Inconsistent join criteria (table name) · Inconsistent join criteria (table structure) · Inconsistent join criteria (column name) · Inconsistent foreign key target name (overall name, table name and table structure) · Inconsistent foreign key target name (table name) · Inconsistent foreign key target name (table structure) · Inconsistent foreign key target name (column name) · Inconsistent foreign key name (overall name, table name and table structure) · Inconsistent foreign key name (table name) · Inconsistent foreign key name (table structure) · Inconsistent foreign key name (column name) · Inconsistent trigger name (overall name, table name and table structure) · Inconsistent trigger name (table name) · Inconsistent trigger name (table structure) · Inconsistent trigger name (column name)
