Adobe Fireworks Adobe
Fireworks is the industry standard for vector graphics. It allows you to draw in any vector format, including SVG (Scalable Vector Graphics), allowing you to create intricate images for any use, including the web. Adobe Fireworks is ideal for designing for mobile devices, as it uses a vector, or scalable vector, format. Vector graphic files can support any size without stretching or scaling, while Raster images break. Adobe Fireworks allows you to draw and convert vectors into raster images for use on the web and on screen. Fireworks allows you to make raster images 100 percent scalable and 100 percent editable. Fireworks also supports painting tools to create vector-like paths, which are essentially a collection of connected curves, such as the strokes you would draw on a canvas, like the one shown in Figure 7-3. You can also create vector-based text and shapes with placement guides. Vector-based text is much more flexible and intuitive than text that's defined by raster images.

placement guides. Adobe Fireworks is designed to work with the bridge between Adobe Acrobat and Adobe Fireworks. This allows Fireworks designers to create, export, preview, and edit files and publish them directly from within Fireworks without the need for a separate viewing or publishing application. Figure 7-4 displays the Bridge with selected layers.

Adobe Fireworks is a popular choice among graphic designers

today for many reasons. For example, the program offers a lot of creative and aesthetic options that rival Photoshop, and the interface makes it easy to work with large files. Fireworks also offers a unique way to import and export files so designers can upload everything to a CMS easily. Read about how to use Fireworks to design for the web at `Figure 7-4:` Fireworks is designed to work with Adobe Acrobat. Also be

C-PACE researchers at the University of Virginia are creating a forum for discussion of their research on the application of nanotechnology to energy. C-PACE, or the Center for Advanced Plasma Science and Engineering, is the first plasma science research center in the U.S. It's based at UVA's Physics Department. "The Center provides a forum for the discussion and integration of our research and the technology transfer and commercialization efforts of companies developing innovative new products," says Steven Wood, Executive Director of C-PACE. "It also offers tools and resources for companies to be successful in the marketplace and for the discovery community to access the rich diversity of UVA's and C-PACE's research capabilities." Wood says the Center intends to provide the leading forum for the study of advanced energy and power-related nanomaterials, microstructures, and device applications. "Nanotechnology is at a point where a new set of tools is needed in order to access and develop applications in this fast-moving field," he says.

"NanoPACE stands to bring new directions, visions, and applications to the energy market. The Center will also serve as a training ground for the next generation of plasma scientists, engineers, researchers, entrepreneurs, and visionaries." Formed in 2003, NanoPACE was a sister organization to one of the largest U.S. plasma science research and development organizations in the world, C-PACE. In 2006 NanoPACE was renamed and became the Center for Advanced Plasma Science and Engineering. "The ability of plasma science to provide the range of energy from first-generation, thermal, and chemical to third-generation, non-thermal, and nuclear is central to the Center's vision of the future," says Wood. "The broad array of materials, processes, and devices developed at C-PACE have already greatly benefited the industrial, military, and civilian sectors, including the development of the microstrip printer for near-space use. We hope to work closely with industry to create products that will have a significant positive impact on energy and other users." The Center has grown from a Department of Energy-based resource center for plasma science and plasma engineering technologies, to a magnetically confined plasma science laboratory employing more than 50 researchers with expertise in 12 technical areas including magnetically confined plasmas, reactor magnetohydrodynamics, nuclear fusion, fusion-inertial confinement, and laser-induced
