If you're using Resorep/FAR modding the latest AC Odyssey.Q: Effect of "the" For example, how does it look to use in such a way: FizzBuzz is a popular method for testing the proficiency of developers in programming. I read that one should not use the word "the" if describing a fictional character, but a character can also be fictional. This sentence makes me wonder if it's correct or not. If it is, could it be easier to read if were omitted? A: It is perfectly acceptable to use 'the' in front of the name of a fictional character, as your example shows. It's just a question of style, if I were writing this sentence then I would definitely use 'the' to refer to a fictional character. It is also acceptable to use the indefinite article, such as the programming language fizzbuzz or the programming language JavaScript. Using 'the' with a fictional character tends to make it sound more like a person's name, which would be considered bad style. A: You're right, the "grammatical" use of the is a fictitious person, or perhaps a special one. (For more examples, see Fowler (2013) style guide, item 5.) But the fact is that the "person" can be real, or fictitious. The form is very common for names of cities (e.g. "the London", "the Sydney"). The form is acceptable for names of fruits and vegetables, and even for foods (e.g. "the tomato", "the potato"). But it can seem odd to some; the former example is slightly jarring: the "London" sounds like a
