anesthetized cats. Continuous, multi-unit electrical activity was recorded from the forelimb region of the primary somatosensory cortex of anesthetized cats during air-jet stimulation of the left and right vibrissae. Air-jet stimulation of the left and right vibrissae generated equal discharges when all vibrissae were hot. Responses to air-jet stimulation were suppressed when the left and right vibrissae were cold.
Responses were weakly modulated by air-jet displacement over the vibrissae when all vibrissae were hot but were more strongly suppressed when the left and right vibrissae were cold. These results suggest that hot and cold stimulation of the vibrissae can generate brain waves when the vibrissae are stimulated separately.

These results provide electrophysiological evidence that the vibrissae are functionally segregated.Q: Play music in background of app, with UIAlertView and

This process, known as'restenosis', is the mechanism by which arteries healed by angioplasty will collapse again. The application of new medical and surgical treatment modalities has resulted in successful reduction of the incidence of recurrent restenosis. Angioplasty and stent implantation have been shown to be effective in treating stenoses following coronary angioplasty. They also play an important role in reducing the risk of restenosis with percutaneous transluminal coronary angioplasty. The choice of which treatment modality to use is influenced by patient characteristics such as lesion morphology and by
