Take advantage of software tools that are available via Nodeshares Nodeshares Release 3.0. Best investigation journalism This is a round-up of my favourite investigation journalism of 2017 (so far). Whether they're defining a problem or exposing an issue, these are some of the most important journalistic discoveries of the year. How Donald Trump is running his businesses: "I know some of my colleagues have written that I'm a businessman. I am not a businessman. I am a person who loves to do deals," [read more] How students can be targeted by algorithms: "Many academics are making a point of not sharing social media links to their research papers or articles. But the dilemma is that to ensure people find them, they are increasingly using paid adverts that are deeply personalised." [read more] The new radicalised Islamic state: "An impossible radicalisation: I'm Muslim, and I'm in Syria. How is it possible for me to join ISIS?" [read more] Geography of web-based protest: "In the past, the main foci of political protest on the internet have been about issues that are of immediate personal concern to activists, from gay rights and women's rights to environmental issues and animal rights. But in recent years, protestors have begun to use the internet not just for issues that directly affect their lives, but to also engage with a broad range of political and social issues."
